

RUSSIAN PERFORMING ARTS

Contents

Dance
Music
Theatre
Cinema

DANCE

Overview Like other nations the Russians see dance, an art form that uses the body as its instrument, as a reflection of their lives, culture and history. Ancient Russian dance was religious in nature, a part of organized pagan rituals where dances were performed in honor of the gods. Although dance later lost its religious character, it remained a part of social events such as births, marriages, religious and national holidays, festivals, etc. As one of the Western European art forms being introduced into Russia in the late 17th – early 18th centuries the new dance form, ballet, carved a niche for itself among the existing forms of dance practiced and performed in the country. Russian folk dances vary from region to region, each displaying its own unique characteristics.

ANCIENT PERIOD

Khorovod (Karagod, tanok, krug, ulitsa): This ancient folk dance originated as part of pagan rituals performed both to honor the sun god, Yaril, and to show repentance. The songs and the dances were slow with participants holding hands, generally in the middle of a circle created by three women.

Plyaska: Performed by one dancer, pairs, or numerous dancers, this folk dance is characterized by passionate movements, emphasizing the dancer's individuality. The music for this dance is a traditional instrumental form of music whose origins pre-date Kievan Rus.

Pereplyas: Performed in pairs, this dance takes the form of a competition with each dancer attempting to outdo the other through a display of skill, power and talent.

POSTCLASSICAL PERIOD

Prisyadka (Cossack Dance): Danced by men, this folk dance is characterized by kicks performed from deep squats.

Barynya: A fast, spirited folk dance characterized by squats and stomping, the barynya is accompanied by chastushka (folk song) and is improvised, rather than following a set pattern.

Kamarinskaya: This traditional folk dance is characterized by losing oneself in the dance, improvisation, and strong emotion.

Chechotka: Performed by a bayan (accordion) player wearing lapti (shoes made of birch bark fiber), the chechotka is a traditional Russian form of tap dance.

Mazurka: Of Polish origin, the mazurka was popular at balls in the time of the Russian Empire. It was danced by couples, often four or eight, and involved heel clicks and stamps together with improvised moves.

Pletionka (the Braid): Although similar to a Greek chain dance, in the pletionka while the dancers in the chain perform the same basic steps, the lead will often break free of the other dancers and perform an improvisation.

Troika: Named after the traditional Russian sled pulled by three horses, this dance is performed by one man and two women.

Trepak: Characterized by prisiadka (kicking from a deep squat), this lively Cossack dance is generally performed by men.

Yablochko: Generally considered a sailor's dance, it is performed to accompaniment of chastushka folk songs.

EARLY MODERN PERIOD

Kadril (Rigodon): Generally danced by four couples arranged in a square this folk dance of French origin was often danced competitively.

Lancier: Danced by four couples, this variant of the Quadrille is a form of square dance of French origin.

Ballet: Ballet came to Russia with Peter the Great who made assemblies and balls important social functions in his court. The introduction of classical ballet into Russia was simply one element of Peter's diverse methods to make Russia European. Ballet was prestigious because it was foreign, and Parisian in particular, and was regarded as a form of etiquette rather than an art form. The first imperial ballet school, directed by Jean-Baptiste Landé was established in 1738, and by the 1740s there were three ballet masters. Catherine II's establishment of an imperial theater system in 1756, a directorate of imperial theaters in 1766, the construction of the Bolshoi Theater in 1773, and the establishment of the imperial theater school in 1779 all secured a firm place for ballet in Russia. As the 18th century drew to a close, the ballet school was an element of the imperial theater bureaucracy, and some of the most important European ballet masters and choreographers of this period had worked to create the Russian imperial ballet.

NINETEENTH CENTURY

Polka: With its distinctive three quick steps followed by a hop this dance of Bohemian origin requires a spacious dancefloor for couples as they circle about.

Krakovyak: Directed by the lead male dancer as he sings, this dance of Polish origin is performed by several couples.

Padespan: This rapid ballroom dance for couples took its inspiration from the Spanish Pas d'Espagne.

Romantic Period: Ballet masters in Russia in the 19th century continued to come from abroad; among the most important were Pehr Christian Johansson, Jules Perrot, Charles-Louis Didelot, Marius Petipa, and Arthur Saint-Léon.

Russian School: The Russian school, which came to be regarded as possessing the most well-developed technique of any school, emerged as a synthesis of the French school and the Italian school whose techniques was introduced by Cecchetti. Some of the young Russian dancers trained by Cecchetti in the late 19th century became some of the most famous dancers of the early 20th century – Anna Pavlova, Vaslav Nijinsky and Michael Fokine. Other students of his such as Agrippina Vaganova in Russia and Ninette de Valois in England became founders of their own companies of developed their own teaching systems. These teachers and dancers took the techniques of the Russian school back to France, and from there they spread into other parts of Europe and the world.

Grand Ballet (Age of Petipa): Taken from the French term ballet à grand spectacle, Russian grand ballet was developed under Marius Petipa, a French dancer and choreographer who worked more than six decades at the Mariinsky Theater in St. Petersburg. Grand ballet, productions that matched contemporary operas in terms of length and storyline, became the favored form in the late 19th century when modern classical ballet reached its peak in Russia. Considered an “art of spectacle” [zrelishchnoe iskusstvo], the visual effects of grand ballet overshadowed the music, and even rivalled the dancing itself in importance.

Ballet-Féerie: Popular in the last two decades of the 19th century in private theaters in Russia, ballet-féerie was an Italian-based popular derivation of grand ballet which emphasized visual effects at the expense of choreography, flashy performances by the main dancers and set routines for the others. The plots were generally based on fairy tales; the most famous ballet-féerie was the 1881 St. Petersburg production of Luigi Manzotti’s Excelsior.

Bolshoi Ballet: Taking its name from the Bolshoi Theater in 1825, some of the most important choreographers of the 19th century – Arthur Saint-Léon, Marius Petipa and Carlo Blasis – staged their works at this theater. Even during the Soviet period the Bolshoi Ballet was able to keep its name.

Mariinsky Ballet (Kirov Ballet): Originally named for the Mariinsky Theater in St. Petersburg, the Mariinsky Ballet would be renamed twice in the 20th century. The first was in 1917 when it became the State Academy of Ballet and Opera, and the second in 1934 when it was renamed the Kirov Ballet following Sergei Kirov’s assassination.

TWENTIETH CENTURY

The period in the early 20th century between the last works by Petipa and the ballets of Nijinsky, Gorsky and Fokine were a period of stagnation and decline for Russian Ballet.

Acmeism: In the 1910s the esthetic elements of Acmeism – clarity of expression and compactness of form – could be seen in Russian ballet productions staged in Paris. Mikhail Fokine’s Schéhérazade and Polovtsian Dances, and the works of Vaslav Nijinsky’s works all displayed a clarity of forms and a clear emphasis on the tangible world.

Modernist Period: The flight of numerous composers, dancers and choreographers from Russia after the revolution combined with lack of foreign artists entering the country left Russian ballet with no option other than to develop its own talent. Russian ballet came to be known as Soviet ballet, and was isolated from outside influence. Although the Central Theatre Committee (Tsentrotéatr) had assumed control over imperial theaters, including the Maryinsky (Kirov) and Bolshoi, in 1919, independent, experimental choreographers and dance troupes flourished in the 1920s. However, these independent groups and artists were all brought under state control in the early 1930s.

Neo-classical period:

Ballets Russes: Despite its name, Sergei Diaghilev’s Ballets Russes (1911-1929), never performed in Russia, instead it used Russian artists to bring its vision of traditional Russian dance merged with new choreography, modern design, contemporary music, and folk art. Two of its dancers, Vaslav Nijinsky and Anna Pavlova, would become household names. Just before the outbreak of World War I, Diaghilev began to collaborate with artists such as Braque, Cocteau, Matisse, Derain, Satie, and Picasso, as well as with Russian modernists such as Goncharova, Naum Gabo, and Larinov to stage avant-garde works.

Balanchine: Originally a dancer in the Mariinsky Ballet, George Balanchine defected from the Soviet Union while on tour in Europe in 1925 and joined Diaghilev’s Ballets Russes. In 1933 Balanchine emigrated to the US, later becoming a co-founder of the New York City Ballet.

Discussion/Questions

1. How did the period of Europeanization effect ballet?
2. How were the Russian Avant-Garde and Diaghilev's Ballet Russes linked?
- 3- During the 19th and 20th centuries what genre changes did Russian ballet pass through?

Reading

1. McBurney, Erin, Art and Power in the Reign of Catherine the Great: The State Portraits, Thesis, Columbia University, 2014.
- 2- Rice, Tamara Talbot, A Concise History of Russian Art, Frederick A. Praeger Publisher, 1967, pp.
- 3- Homans, Jennifer, Apollo's Angels, A History of Ballet, Ch. 7., Random House, New York, 2010.
- 4- Homans, Jennifer, Apollo's Angels, A History of Ballet, Ch. 8., Random House, New York, 2010.
- 5- Homans, Jennifer, Apollo's Angels, A History of Ballet, Ch. 9., Random House, New York, 2010.
- 6- Pritchard, Jane, "From the Russian avant-garde to Sergei Diaghilev's Ballets Russes", Studies in Theatre and Performance, 2016, Vol.36, No.3, pp. 219-229.
- 7- Sholl, Tim, From Petipa to Balanchine, Classical Revival and the Modernization of Ballet, Routledge, New York, 2005, Ch.1, pp. 1-16.
- 8- Garafole, Lynn, "Russian Ballet in the Age of Petipa", Cambridge Companion to Ballet, Edited by Marion Kant, Cambridge University Press, 2007, Ch. 13, pp. 208-221.
- 9- Prokhorov, Vladimir, Russian Folk Songs: Musical Genres and History, The Scarecrow Press Inc., London, 2002, pp.60-65.

MUSIC

Overview Music plays a fundamental part in human development, and is one of the essential parts of communication, like language, facilitating human interactions within groups and sometimes even creating selfless union. Formal music originally came to Russia from Byzantium through the adoption of Orthodox Christianity in the 10th century. The Russian Orthodox church's dominant position over music in pre-Petrine Russian cultural life continued until the 18th century, and it engaged in a ceaseless war against folk musicians and instrumentalists. With Peter the Great's Westernization process, Russian music adopted the musical traditions of contemporary Western countries and reshaped it by blending traditional Russian music culture with it.

POST-CLASSICAL PERIOD

Early Liturgical Music

When Prince Vladimir converted to Orthodox Christianity in 988 he ruled a land that had not yet become a sovereign state and whose culture was pagan in nature. As a result, the Church moved quickly to become the dominant cultural force in Kievan Rus'. However, Vladimir's decision to convert to Orthodoxy led to Russia's political isolation from its neighbors, and in order to prevent outside religious influences from entering Russia the Russian Church became isolationist. One area of culture in which the Church sought to assert its influence was music, both religious and secular.

Like Orthodox Christianity itself, the music of the Russian Orthodox Church was imported in the 10th century from the Byzantine Empire. Initially, musical instruments were not used in the liturgy, as their use was considered sinful by the Orthodox Church, an attitude which would not change until the middle of the 17th century. Another aspect of this hostility towards the use of musical instruments was the church's long, bitter struggle against folk musicians, in particular instrumentalists. This animosity was fueled by the Orthodox Church's rivalry with the Catholic Church, which allowed instrumental music, and by its struggle against Russia's pagan heritage, a heritage which folk instrumentalists were continuing in the church's view.

Liturgical music in the Orthodox Church was sung a capella by all-male choirs who performed a monodic chant in unison. Over time this type of liturgical music began to evolve into new forms that were unlike the Byzantine chants. One of these, developed some time around the 12th century was the Znamenny chant (Znamenny raspev). These chants were performed using a system of eight voices.

Traditional Instruments and the Skomorokhi

Before the introduction of Christianity the musical instruments found in Russia were similar to those used throughout medieval Europe. Among these were the svirel, an oboe-like instrument; the gusli, similar to a zither; the gudok, similar to a fiddle; and horns. In addition there were tambourines, assorted noise makers, drums, and small bells, instruments more typically associated with shamanic rituals. These instruments were played during religious and court ceremonies, and for entertainment. They were also associated with the skomorokhi, folk musicians in Kievan Rus and Muscovy who often played at weddings.

Skomorokhi: Skomorokhi were the wandering minstrels in Russia; they were singers of freedom, who dared to ridicule the power, the clergy, and the rich and sympathized with the common people. The skomorokhi found themselves officially banned during the "Time of Troubles", the period when Muscovite Rus' was being transformed into a secular, centralized state between the 14th – 17th centuries. The reasons for this ban are not entirely clear; they may have been sacrificed to maintain relations between the church and the state, or they may have been regarded as a threat to the state. Whatever the true reason, pressured by the church Tsar Alexei Mikhailovich issued the decree banning the skomorokhi in 1648. After having been an integral part of Russian popular culture for over 700 years, the skomorokhi found themselves exiled to northern Russia or Siberia, and their instruments destroyed.

EARLY MODERN PERIOD

Secular Music and Western Influence

The Russian tsars saw their position as rulers as having not only a secular aspect, but a spiritual one as well, an attitude that would not change until the late 17th century when Peter I became tsar. The tsars believed that they were the spiritual leaders of an Orthodox state and servants of God as well. For example, Tsar Ivan IV composed a number of church chants and was said to be a talented church musician. As a result of this view of their religious role, the tsars were against secular music, both foreign and domestic. Anyone giving public performances of secular music, like the skomorokhi, were treated as criminals.

The hostile attitude towards secular music changed dramatically when Peter the Great ascended the throne. He set in motion a number of reforms to transform Russia from what he saw as a backward society into a modern, Western-style country. In his new capital, St. Petersburg, he held court balls in the manner of Western Europe where his aristocrats attempted to perform unfamiliar European dances. Copying the Germans, he formed "staff orchestras" that played at court ceremonies, and even travelled with his army in the field. Hoping to marry Peter's daughter, the Duke of Schleswig-Holstein, Carl Friedrich brought a German chamber orchestra with him to St. Petersburg in 1721. The orchestra played works by a number of contemporary composers, and chamber orchestras soon became a requisite element of aristocratic society. In the years after Peter the Great's reign musicians and composers continued to be brought from Europe and paid well for their talents. Private orchestras and choirs, as well as opera and ballet theaters had become feature of the estates of a number of Russian aristocrats by the end of the 18th century. This trend provided a new opportunity for some former serfs; trained by teachers from Europe they went on to become some of the most famous performers of the day.

NINETEENTH CENTURY

Russian Composers and the Incorporation of Russian Influences

As Russia had no conservatories prior to the 1860's, Russia's first composer, Mikhail Glinka, had to travel abroad to obtain the majority of his musical training. This allowed him to study the folk music of many different countries and to make the acquaintance of many well-known European composers. After his return to Russia Glinka would greatly influence Russian music's development in general, and opera in particular.

A number of composers after Glinka followed his lead and composed music based on Russian fairy tales; among them were Rimsky-Korsakov, The Golden Cockerel; Stravinsky, The Nightingale; and Prokofiev, in Love for Three Oranges. In the compositions for ballet, Tchaikovsky, Stravinsky and Prokofiev would also be influenced by Glinka's use of fairy-tales.

Glinka's A Life for the Tsar and Ruslan and Ludmila which was first performed in 1842 would be the first in a long line of operas based on Russian fairy tales. Glinka's compositions mark a turning point in Russian music, the point at which Russian music truly becomes a part of European music, while still retaining its folk music traditions.

Russian Musical Society: Grand Duchess Elena Pavlovna and the composer Anton Rubinstein established the Russian Musical Society in 1859. Its primary aim was to encourage and expand the musical study and performance in the country. Regarded as Russia's first school of music, the Society provided instruction to anyone who wished to study music.

One of the most important events in the growth of Russian music occurred with the opening in St. Petersburg of Russia's first conservatory in 1862.

Balakirev Circle: Mily Balakirev established the Balakirev Circle, a musical group, in St. Petersburg. The Circle studied a wide spectrum of musical traditions to employ in their own compositions: Russian folksongs, classical composers and music from Spain, Eastern Europe and the Middle East. Exoticism was becoming as important a part of Russian music as it was in European music. This can be seen in the Middle Eastern influences in Scheherazade by Rimsky-Korsakov, and the Central Asian elements in Borodin's opera Prince Igor.

In 1866 Russia's second conservatory was established in Moscow by Anton Rubinstein from St. Petersburg and Nikolai Rubinstein from Moscow. Both brothers would play important roles in making Russian music more professional. Famous graduates of Russia's first two conservatories include Tchaikovsky (St. Petersburg) and Rachmaninoff (Moscow).

Mighty Handful (Moguchaya kuchka): At approximately the same time, five composers from St. Petersburg formed a group which became known as "The Mighty Handful" (or "The Mighty Five"). They shared common political and aesthetic opinions and held that music made by Russians should accurately reflect the people of Russia, and not what was taught by Germans in the conservatory. The group's leader was Balakirev, with Mussorgsky, Rimsky-Korsakov, Borodin and César Cui making up the rest of the group.

They advocated the use of Russian elements such as folk music and folklore in compositions, and were disturbed by the predominant position of European music and European musicians. Because of their ability to convey a narrative message they preferred song, symphonic poems and opera over other genres. Despite the group's early solidarity, by the mid-1870s Balakirev and the other members were no longer on good terms and the group was, for all practical purposes, dissolved.

A number of well-known works would be composed by members of the Mighty Handful, among them the operas Sadko and The Snow Maiden, and the symphonic poem Scheherazade by Rimsky-Korsakov; Khovanshchina and Boris Godunov by Mussorgsky; Tamara by Balakirev; and Prince Igor by Borodin. All are regarded as masterpieces of romantic nationalism and are inspired, as many of the Mighty Handful's works were, by Russian literature, history and folk stories.

One of the first graduates of the St. Petersburg Conservatory, Pyotr Tchaikovsky disagreed with the Mighty Handful over the composition of classical music, in particular which tradition, Western or Russian, should determine how it was composed. Although Tchaikovsky's interest in nationalistic music grew in the late 19th century, he remained opposed to the Mighty Handful's nationalistic bent. Despite his disagreements with the Mighty Handful, Tchaikovsky's Romeo and Juliet shows the influence of Balakirev.

TWENTIETH CENTURY

In the 20th century, the central themes of composers such as Sergei Vasil'evich Rachmaninov, Igor Fedorovich Stravinsky, Sergei Sergeevich Prokofiev and Dmitry Dmitrievich Shostakovich were liturgical and folkloric. Specifically, Mussorgsky in his historical operas Boris Godunov and Khovanshchina; Rimsky-Korsakov in his The Legend of the Invisible City of Kitezh and the Maiden Fevronia; and Prokofiev in his score to Sergei Eisenstein's film Ivan the Terrible, used Russian folkloric and liturgical music combining the techniques of Western music and the Russian classical music tradition.

After 1917 musicians were subject to extreme pressure from the state to follow aesthetic standards determined by the government. State control over musicians was extended by Stalin in 1932 with the formation of the Union of Soviet Composers. This was a regulatory body whose mandate was to direct all musical activity for the government's own political purposes. One result was that all Soviet composers were compelled to follow very specific regulations concerning the types of music they produced and this also led to the permanent emigration of numerous music composers and musicians, such as Stravinsky, Rachmaninov, and the pianist-composer Nikolai Karlovich Medtner, to Europe and the United States.

Discussion/Questions

1. Discuss the early developments in Russian music. Why would the Skomorokhi be treated as criminals?
2. Discuss Westernization and its effects on Russian music. How were the 19th century Russian composers influenced by Western composers and how did they influence the popular culture of the West?

Reading

- 1-Russia and Western Civilization, Edited by Russell Bova, ME Sharpe, New York, 2003, Ch. II, Sect. 6.
- 2-Billington, J.H., The Face of Russia, TV Books, L.L.C., New York, 1998, Ch. III, Sect.4.
The Cambridge Companion to Modern Russian Culture, Edited by Nicholas Rzhevsky, Cambridge University Press, 1998, Ch. 10.
- 3-Sargeant, L. M., Harmony and Discord, Music and the Transformation of Russian Cultural Life, Oxford University Press, 2011, Ch. 1.
- 4-Taruskin, R., On Russian Music, University of California Press, Berkeley, 2009.
- Jensen, C. R., Musical Cultures in Seventeenth - Century Russia, Indiana University Press, Bloomington, 2009.
- 5-Robinson, H., "Music", in the Cambridge Companion to Modern Russian Culture, 1998, Ch.10, pp. 236-263.

THEATRE

Overview Until the 11th century the early Russian people had primitive forms of entertainment, mostly ritualistic ceremonies, pagan shows with dramatic recitations of fables, tales and proverbs, and singing and dances, performed by skomorokhi, traveling minstrels. While in the past the rigid rules of the Orthodox Church made the development of a truly national theater impossible, and theaters suffered partial destruction and the persecution of performers, during the Soviet period theaters had to conform to the rigid frames of ideological dictatorship.

ANCIENT PERIOD

Pagan ceremonies in which tales, proverbs and fables were recited, together with the songs and dances of itinerant jesters, known as skomorokhi, laid the foundation for the development of Russian theater.

POST CLASSICAL PERIOD

Skomorokhi: The Skomorokhi, based on Byzantine models, appeared around the middle of the 11th century in Kievan Rus and were performers who played musical instruments, sang, danced and even composed the scores for their performances.

The skomorokhi were not universally popular in Kievan Rus, and were described in pejorative terms in the Primary Chronicle. Both the ruling authorities and the Orthodox Church viewed the skomorokhi as being in league with the devil, and persecuted them for maintaining what they regarded as pagan traditions.

A major reason for the skomorokhi's unpopularity with both the secular and religious leaders was the nature of their art. The skomorokhi's performances were aimed at ordinary people, and often were in opposition to those in power. As a result the clergy and feudal rulers viewed the skomorokhi as useless to society at the very least, and politically and religiously dangerous at the very worst.

Both civil and religious leaders subjected the skomorokhi to particularly intense persecution during the period of Mongol rule, a period which also coincided with the Orthodox Church's strong advocacy of asceticism.

The skomorokhi's performances continued to be viewed with suspicion during the time of Ivan IV; it was believed that they undermined the authority and interest of the civil and religious leaders. There were even claims that their practices were somehow a form of devilry from the Greeks.

EARLY MODERN PERIOD

16th century: At this time the Orthodox Church was hostile to any kind of performances and allowed only plays that had religious content. Performances were given in city squares or in the streets; spectators were encouraged to take part in them. Occasionally, in the 16th– 17th centuries, groups of skomorokhi would join together to form a vataga (large group) and put on a performance.

17th century: The skomorokhi's performances were banned by Tsar Alexis Mikhailovich in the mid-17th century for being blasphemous; nonetheless, popular celebrations remained a venue for occasional performances. A number of dramatic performances were given in the royal court in 1640 and 1650. An English merchant, John Hebdon, was ordered to hire German puppeteers in large numbers to perform in Russia in 1660. Significant changes in both Russian theater and Russian society would result from the introduction of Western theater during the reign of Tsar Alexis Mikhailovich. Court theatrical performances continued until Alexis' death in 1676, after which they were stopped under pressure of the Patriarch Joachim.

It was not until the 17th century, with the introduction of literary culture, that the concept of a dramatic repertoire became known in Russia. In the 17th century the large number of works translated from western languages and the founding of Russia's first theater were clear indications of Western influence. The degree of this influence grew dramatically with the reforms of Peter I. One result of this increased contact with Western Europe was the attempt to adapt the literary models of Western Europe to Russian writing.

18th century: The 18th century witnessed the end of the skomorokhi's performances, but some aspects of their art survived in the rayok (humorous talk shows) and balagan (puppet theater). The puppet shows had a long existence, and shows were put on in city and market squares as well as at fairs. Performances were aimed at the lowest classes, with jokes and plot lines being rather bawdy.

A public theater was built in Red Square in 1702 by order of Peter the Great. When completed a German theater troupe came to put on performances. Initially the performances were in German, but by 1705 plays were being translated into Russian and performed. Most of these plays were translations of German and Dutch comedies, or poor adaptations of plays such as Molière's Le Médecin malgré lui. Later, both the Moscow Academy and the Moscow Medical School would stage dramas. More surprising, perhaps, was the establishment of a theater in Rostov by its bishop, Dmitrii, which he then used for performances of plays he wrote.

It was not until the latter half of the 18th century that the theater truly became an institution in Russia. The establishment of St. Petersburg's Alexandrinskiy Theater on August 30, 1756 is often taken as the starting point of Russian professional theater. A major innovation was the merging of two theatrical groups – aristocratic students from the Cadet School and a troupe of professional actors from the theater founded by Fedor Volkov – and then giving performances for the public at large. At the same time uniquely Russian drama was emerging in the works of the playwright Alexander Sumarokov. His tragedy, Khorev, is regarded as the first Russian drama which depicts the relationship between the monarch and the nobles and includes warnings against tyranny, excessive favoritism, and arbitrary disgrace, and was even performed for the Empress Elizabeth.

Considered the founder of Russian drama, Alexander Sumarokov blended Russian themes with European dramatic forms in his works. Sumarokov was appointed as the first director of the Russian theater in 1756 by Elizabeth, and directed Russia's first professional public theater between 1756 – 1761; his works would become the basis of the theater's repertoire. His later works included comedies such as The Troublesome Girl, The Imaginary Cuckold, and The Mother as Rival of Her Daughter; and such tragedies as Mstislav and The False Demetrius. This last work is ostensibly a tale about a despotic ruler, and has often been interpreted as a criticism of papal power. However, its real significance is as an indirect criticism of Catherine the Great's arbitrary use of power, while at the same time defending legitimate monarchy. The False Demetrius is thus the beginning of a long tradition of theater as political criticism. In addition, Sumarokov's plays The Guardian and Khorev are regarded as the first political comedy and tragedy in Russia.

Catherine the Great, fearful of importation of liberal Western European thought, introduced a state monopoly on the Moscow and Petersburg theaters, and the Ministry of Interior supervised actors' registration as members of the civil service, applied strict censorship on the repertoire of the theaters in Moscow and Petersburg, and independent entrepreneurs were allowed to operate only under police supervision.

The major playwright of Catherine the Great's era was Denis Fonvizin. Two of his most famous plays were the neo-classical The Minor and The Brigadier. Both were satires of the values of the age and attempted to encourage more moral conduct, however The Brigadier takes particular aim at the ignorance and moral laxity of the upper classes. Despite the fact that the monarchy often took issue with Fonvizin's works, Catherine the Great was an admirer of them.

NINETEENTH CENTURY

In 1819, the Ministry of the Interior had taken control over theatrical censorship; the severity of its censorship would only increase over time and expand outside of the theaters. In some cases periodicals which made negative comments about actors found themselves the target of the Ministry's displeasure – since actors were civil servants, criticizing them was tantamount to criticizing their employer, the state. However, the effect official censorship was felt most keenly in the theaters in St. Petersburg and Moscow, whose creativity was stifled by government guidelines. Beyond St. Petersburg and Moscow, the situation was slightly better, as independent theaters could put on performances, but still under the watchful eye of the police.

The roles of St. Petersburg and Moscow as the Russia's theatrical centers grew in the 19th century as new theaters were founded. In Moscow in 1824 the Maly (Small) Theater was established, followed in 1825 by the Bolshoi (Big), which was a replacement for the Peter's Theater which had burned down. In 1832 the Alexandrinsky Drama Theater opened in St. Petersburg, and in 1898 the MAT (Moscow Art Theater) established by Vladimir Nemirovich-Danchenko and Konstantin Stanislavsky opened in Moscow which later renamed the Gorky Moscow Art Theater in 1932.

The MAT proved to be the most influential with their productions of the last four plays written by Chekhov which brought them great fame, and the theater would go on to profoundly influence theater in Russia. Combining their talents, playwright Nemirovich-Danchenko and actor-director Stanislavsky adopted Wagner's approach to play production as high art.

Directors would now determine how a drama would be staged, as well as their atmosphere and style – an innovation in Russian theater. The MAT was saved from financial ruin in its initial season by its sixth production, The Seagull by Chekhov which opened on December 17, 1898. Its first performance two years earlier in St. Petersburg had been a disaster, and Chekhov was understandably hesitant to give his permission for a second production of his play. However, Nemirovich-Danchenko's persistent pleading paid off and Chekhov was more than rewarded by the reception his play received from its second production. The following year in 1899 the MAT staged Uncle Vanya, and Chekhov wrote his two last plays, The Three Sisters and The Cherry Orchard with the MAT in mind.

The first half of the 19th century also witnessed the appearance of Russian drama's first masterpieces. Among these works were Inspector by Nikolay Gogol, and Alexander Griboyedov's Woe from Wit. The plays by Alexander Ostrovsky which appeared around the middle of the century would inspire a new generation of performers. His series of plays on merchant life highlighted the negative qualities of merchants as cheats, tyrannical bosses and fathers, and narrow-minded philistines.

After the emancipation of Russian serfs in 1861, and the abolition of the imperial monopoly during Alexander II gave impetus to the people's theater movement which was promoted by the Narodniks (populists). The theater now began to serve less as a leisure activity than as an educational tool.

TWENTIETH CENTURY

At the beginning of the 20th century there were only six Imperial theaters in Russia administered by the Directorate of Imperial Theaters, and all explicitly served Tsarist propaganda purposes. However, after the first revolution of 1905, the government was gradually easing restrictions on theaters. Theaters were not only sponsored by the Imperial government, there were also intellectuals who organized theaters for peasants and workers throughout the country, and a few touring troupes and eventually-amateur theaters organized performances for peasants and workers. In addition to the Tsarist government, in many provinces local zemstva (local administration) and factory-owners sponsored popular theaters. Theaters began to stage controversial and almost overtly political plays.

In 1909 a commission on village theater was set up under the protection of the Moscow Society of People's Universities as The Section to Aid in the Establishment of Rural, Factory, and School Theaters, and in 1915 the Section was joined by the Russian Theater Society (RTO). There was a blossoming of theatrical performances as official control of the arts relaxed. A number of private theaters appeared. One of them was Alexander Tairov's Chamber (Kamerny) Theater that opened their doors in 1914 after the end of the government's theater monopoly in 1882.

Shortly after the Bolsheviks seized power in October 1917 they issued a decree of the Soviet of People's Commissars on 9 November 1917 that placed all the theaters under the authority of the arts section of the State Commission for Education, and all served as agitprop (agitation and propaganda) theater. The Soviets also opened a theater section (TEO) to monitor the theaters, and appointed Meyerhold as director in 1920, its repertoire was selected by the poet Alexander Blok, and the directing section was run by Evgeny Vakhtangov and Stanislavsky's friends.

Lenin, on 26 August 1919, signed a decree centralizing all the finances and nationalizing all theatrical property. They regularly distributed free tickets to the ordinary people to promote popular education, changing the predominantly urban character of earlier theater.

An experimental artistic institution, the Proletkult was founded in September 1917 by Alexander Bogdanov during the course of the war. Its stated goals were a total break with the bourgeois past, radically modifying existing artistic forms, rejecting all existing professional theater and promoting a new, so-called proletarian culture. However, the Central Committee of the Bolshevik Party approved a decree on 1 December 1920 which condemned both the institution as a duplication of services that competed with existing bureaucratic systems, like Nakompros, and its hostile idealist philosophy. As a result, Proletkult was integrated into Narkompros.

The full-scale Bolshevik offensive against the theater began during Stalin when all theaters were accused of having purely bourgeois, alien and hostile ideology. For the Soviets the theater should serve as a propaganda tool of Party's orthodox catch-phrases. The Central Committee of the All-Union Communist Party passed a resolution on April 23, 1932, the so-called On the Reconstruction of Literary and Artistic Organizations. There was a terror of persecution and intimidation of art experts and players, many of whom lost their positions, and theaters were closed.

When the Soviets began preparing for WWII, the state turned its attention to the previously condemned Russian past, and to increase patriotism, they used the Russian tsars, princes, military leaders and religion.

After the death of Stalin, the attitude towards theaters was suddenly changed with Khrushchev's Thaw period (1956-1964). Khrushchev's de-Stalinization speech presented at the 20th Party congress in 1956 introduced more freedom and humanism in the theater. During Khrushchev's period, Mikhail Bulgakov's The Days of the Turbins, and Flight, the dramatisation of his novel The Master and Margarita were staged; and three directors, Georgii Tovstonogov at the Gorky Theater in Leningrad; Anatolii Efros and Iuriy Liubimov at the Malaia Bronnaia and Taganka theaters in Moscow directed outstanding plays.

Under Brezhnev, on the other hand, the majority of theaters favored safe plays, and, as a result, theaters played to half-empty houses, continuing to survive due to financial support from the Ministry of Culture.

Gorbachev's new and more liberal approach to the arts showed its effects, and there was a 50% increase in the number of theaters in Moscow in only two years (1986-1988). There were also a number of Palaces of Culture (club-houses attached to the factories), which provided auditoria for amateur and semi-professional groups to perform. The control of theaters was removed from the Ministry of Culture and handed over to the independent Union of Theater Workers established in 1986 which aimed at freeing all theaters from the Ministry's strict control, allowing theater companies to handle their own affairs, effectively abolishing censorship.

Discussion/Questions

- 1- Discuss the skomorokhi and their importance in the history of Russian theater.
- 2- Why was theater used as a weapon during Stalin's time?
- 3- Why did the theaters served as agitprop theater during the Soviet Union? Why did the artists' political inclinations compel them to subordinate art to ideology?
- 4- What were the motives behind the hostility of the Soviet government toward the creative theaters? What distinguishes the Soviet attitude from the Tsarist attitude against theater?

Reading

- 1- Malnick, B., "The Origin and Early History of the Theater in Russia", The Slavonic and East European Review, Vol. 19, No. 53/54, The Slavonic Year-Book (1939 - 1940), pp. 203-227
- 2- Senelick, L., T., The Cambridge Companion to Modern Russian Culture, Ch.11. The Cambridge University Press, Inc., 1998, pp. 264-299.
- 3- Figes, O., Natasha's Dance, A Cultural History of Russia, Metropolitan Books, New York, 2004.
- 4- Varneke, B.V., History of the Russian Theater, The MacMillan Company, New York, 1951.
- 5- A History of Russian Theater, Edited by Robert Leach and Victor Borovsky, Cambridge University Press, 1999, Ch.1.
- 6- Kelly, C., A History of Russian Theater, the Cambridge University Press, 1999, pp.18-41.
- 7- Frame, M., "Censorship and control in the Russian imperial theaters during the 1905 revolution and its aftermath", Revolutionary Russia, Vol.7, No.2, December 1994, pp.164-191.
- 8- Thurston, G., "The Impact of Russian Popular Theater, 1886-1915", The Journal of Modern History, Vol. 55, No. 2 (Jun., 1983), pp. 237-267.
- 9- Gorchakov, N.A., The Theater in Soviet Russia, Columbia University Press, 1957.
- 10- Glenn, M., "Soviet Theater: Glasnost' in Action –With Difficulty", in Culture and Media in the USSR Today, Edited by Julian Graffy and Geoffrey A. Hosking, Palgrave MacMillan, 1989, Ch.5, pp.78-88.

CINEMA

Overview Film was introduced into Russia via Europe. During the Imperial period in addition to foreign films, they began to produce Russian films began to be produced. Film became the most popular form of mass entertainment and was inexpensive and easy to produce for urban cultural life. This art form came to be used as a very effective propaganda tool by the Bolsheviks and later became an important industry influencing the social and political history of Russia.

PRE-REVOLUTIONARY CINEMA

Foreign films: Russian filmmaking emerged as an offshoot of European films, introduced by Russian film enterprises that had connections with European film companies. The Lumière brothers introduced the first films in Russia in 1896 and their cameraman Camille Cerf produced his first short film in Russia. It was a recording of the coronation of Nicholas II at the Kremlin. Initially, foreign films predominated until the first decade of the 20th century. Several foreign companies, led by Pathe and Gaumont, shot short documentaries and also helped to create a film market in Russia. 90% of the films shown before World War I were foreign made and most of the production companies in Russia were foreign. The first Russian production company was not established until 1907. During World War I, the number of foreign films was reduced as a result of anti-German campaigns and Russian filmmakers began to produce more nationalistic films.

Silent film: Evgeny Bauer was one of the first film producers of silent films. He worked in the genres of social and psychological drama, and directed Tears, After Death in 1915 and A Life for a Life in 1916. Russian director Vsevolod Meyerhold created his silent film The Picture of Dorian Grey in 1915, using his biomechanical principles of acting. There were other popular silent films based on folk tales. Film director Alexander Drankov began his career in Russia while he was working as a photographer for the The Times in London, and received most of his financial support and equipment from England in 1907. He produced his seven-and-a-half-minute, first Russian silent narrative film Stenka Razin, a tale of a Cossack hero in 1908. In 1913 new movie theaters were opened in the Russian Empire, 134 in St. Petersburg and 107 in Moscowⁱ. Film directors and screenwriters such as Aleksandr Khanzhonkov (who also created stop motion animation) and Vasily Goncharov produced historical war films like Defence of Sevastopol in 1912. The main theme of these films was the struggle against foreign imperialistic powers and the strengthening of autocratic power for the Soviet Union's unity.ⁱⁱ Literary classics also became the themes of silent films. Film director and screenwriter Yakov Protazanov produced a biographical film about Lev Tolstoy called Departure of a Grand Old Man in 1912, Nikolai Stavrogin after Dostoevsky's The Devil in 1915, Queen of Spades after Pushkin's tale in 1916, and Father Sergius after Tolstoy's tale in 1918.

Film director Vladimir Gardin named his film Home of the Gentry after Turgenev's novel. He co-directed with Yakov Protazanov a film Natasha Rostova in 1915 after Tolstoy's War and Peace character Natasha Rostova.

Animation: The first Russian animator, dancer and choreographer, Alexander Shiryayev, using a 17.5 mm Biokam camera, and his hand-made puppets in a toy theatre, recorded the dancers' movements creating first stop-frame animation in Russia. Polish-Russian director, Ladislav Starevich directed his animated silent film Lucanus Cervus in 1910.

REVOLUTIONARY CINEMA

"The cinema is for us the most important of all the arts"
Leninⁱⁱⁱ

The Revolution in 1917 made significant changes in the film sector. At the beginning, films, having been considered an educational activity, were placed under the supervision of the People's Commissariat of Education headed by Anatoly Lunacharsky.

Films had to be created and transported to the masses. Agitka films which are characterized by their openly didactic content and direct verbal appeals to the audience, such as Red Army Soldier, Who Is Your Enemy?, For the Red Banner and Toward the Bright Kingdom of the Third International appeared to serve that purpose. They were agitational short films used to train illiterate masses and raise the morale of the Red Army during the Civil war.

Films produced during this era also contained anti-Tsarist themes. The first film produced was a religious film Father Sergius, which was based on Tolstoy's novel and was directed by Yakov Protazanov in 1918. In 1919, the film industry was nationalized and the world's first film school Gerasimov Institute of Cinematography (the VGIK) was opened in Moscow. On 27 August 1919, Lenin, by signing a relative decree, showed how important the art of cinema was for the newly formed Soviet state. It was in 1922 that state control over cinema production was imposed with the establishment of the official cinema controlling apparatus, the USSR State Committee for Cinematography (Goskino). From this time until the late 1980s film-makers in the Soviet era were bound to the state and cinema production was planned, financed, censored, and subject to censorship and bureaucratic state control. Cinema was proclaimed a means of propaganda, upbringing and education, with the result that all films become some manifestation of communist ideology.

The first documentaries were shot by two important Soviet directors and theorists, Lev Kuleshov and Dziga Vertov, who developed the "camera-eye" (kino-glaz) concept which records what is occurring live.^{iv} Lev Kuleshov also was one of the founders of the world's first film schools, the Moscow Film School, and created a montage effect called the Kuleshov Effect. Dziga Vertov produced avant-garde films and documentaries, such as Man with a Movie Camera in 1929.

Trained as an architect, Sergey M. Eisenstein moved to cinema in 1924 and his Strike, which began as a documentary and presented a portrait of the inequalities of capitalist Russia, was shown in theatres in 1924. Eisenstein's silent film The Battleship Potemkin, released in 1925, depicted the mutiny of Russian sailors on the Potemkin during the first Revolution of 1905. Film director Vsevolod Pudovkin was another film director who produced a number of feature films depicting inner conflicts and the psychology of people who fought against Tsarist rule during the Revolution of 1905 as in the film Mother which was based on Mikhail Gorky's novel of the same name.

Socialist Realism: In 1934 Russia went through a cultural revolution when socialist realism was officially declared the only acceptable form of artistic expression. For Stalin, art had to reflect only the reality that had accepted by the Party, and the "heroic struggle of the world proletariat ... the grandeur of the victory of Socialism, and the great wisdom and heroism of the Communist Party".^v With the consolidation of Stalinist power Soviet film came under almost total state control. For Stalin cinema provided him a window on cultural life and allowed him to control it. Just before World War II, in 1938 Sergey Eisenstein directed a historical drama film Aleksandr Nevsky, deliberately using this heroic historical event to associate it with the current political situation, creating Marxist heroes liberating the proletariat from fascist Nazis. His movie was supervised by Party officials, and it received the Stalin Prize. One year after World War II, another film, the first Soviet fantasy and color movie, The Stone Flower which depicted the creativity of the Ural miners against cruel landlords and social oppression and directed by Aleksandr Ptushko in 1946 won the Stalin prize.

The Thaw: The Soviet film industry received new impetus immediately following Stalin's death during Khrushchev's de-Stalinization period called "The Thaw". The cinematographer Mikhail Kalatozov's film The Cranes Are Flying marked a new beginning for Soviet cinema focusing on personal portraits of ordinary people who suffered from the stresses and cruelty of World War II, winning the Cannes Film Festival's prestigious Grand Prix in 1958.

The Stagnation: After the brief period of "The Thaw" censorship was reintroduced "The Stagnation" occurred under Brezhnev with the film industry becoming more heavily bureaucratized. The Goskino began to hire veteran Communist Party officials who did not have any experience in film. Sergey Paradzhanov had several projects blocked and spent several years in prison on a charge of homosexuality. Aleksandr Askoldov's Commissar, released in 1967, because it included strong themes of feminism and motherhood during the Civil War, was not released until 1987 and he was barred from the studios.

The most successful film maker in overcoming barriers and in challenging the socialist realist aesthetic was Andrey Tarkovsky, who directed the films Ivan's Childhood, Andrey Rublev, Solaris, Mirror and Stalker. Tarkovsky gained a reputation at home and abroad after Ivan's Childhood, which conveyed the human cost of war and did not glorify the war experience, and the film Andrey Rublev, which was based on the themes of artistic freedom, religion, political ambiguity, and the making of art under a repressive regime, received Prize in Venice 1962 and won at Cannes in 1969. Although Soviet officials attempted to place obstacles in the way of the film festival judges, they were able to obtain the film and it was shown in Russia only after major cuts.

There were World War II dramas internationally recognized released in the 1970s and the 1980s which depicted the cruelty of war such as They Fought for Their Country directed by Dergey Bondarchuk in 1975, and At Dawn It's Quiet Here* directed by Stanislav Rostotsky. Andrey Konchalovsky was the first film director to release World War II films in Hollywood such as Maria's Lovers in 1984, Runaway Train in 1985 and Tango & Cash in 1989.

Glasnost and democracy: The Fifth Congress of the Filmmakers Union in 1986, leaving behind the heritage of socialist realism, introduced less strict policies into the film industry during the period of glasnost and perestroika. The Congress established a Conflict Commission to release previously banned films, and the members of the union established a film museum for the previously suppressed heritage; complete control over the production of films was lifted, and censorship was lessened. The central themes of Soviet films began to cover the problems of ordinary life for the Russian people, and two such films released in 1988. Little Vera depicted sexuality and alienation in Soviet society, and the thriller The Needle covered the struggle with mafia and drug addiction. Several Soviet films have received Oscars such as War and Peace, Moscow Does Not Believe in Tears and Dersu Uzala.

Discussion/Questions

1. How was the Russian film industry affected by the Revolution?
2. Under what conditions were films first made in Russia?
3. During the period of "The Thaw", how much freedom did Soviet film makers have?
4. In what ways did Soviet films from the 1980s depict citizens' ambiguous feelings about the Soviet state?

Reading

- 1- Lary, Nikita, "Film", The Cambridge Companion to Modern Russian Culture, edited by Nicholas Rzhevsky, Cambridge University Press, 1998, pp. 299-329.
- 2- Kovalova, Anna, "World War I and pre-Revolutionary Russian Cinema" Studies in Russian and Soviet Cinema, vol. 11, no. 2, 2017, pp. 96–117.
<http://www.tandfonline.com/loi/rrsc20>
- 3- Swift, E. Anthony, Popular Theater and Society in Tsarist Russia, University of California Press, 2002, p.137.
- 4- A History of Russian Cinema, edited by Brigit Beumers, Wiley Blackwell, 2016.
- 5- David McKenzie and Michael W. Curan, A History of Russia, the Soviet Union, and Beyond, Wadsworth, 2002, pp. 505-506.

ⁱ Swift, E. Anthony, Popular Theater and Society in Tsarist Russia, University of California Press, 2002, p.137.

ⁱⁱ Dziewanowski, M.K. Russia in the Twentieth Century, Prentice Hall, 2003, p. 204.

ⁱⁱⁱ David McKenzie and Michael W. Curan, A History of Russia, the Soviet Union, and Beyond, Wadsworth, 2002, p. 505.

^{iv} Ibid, p. 505.

^v Dziewanowski, M.K. Russia in the Twentieth Century, Prentice Hall, 2003, p. 202.