POETRY

Overview

Classical Indian poetry is a broad category, encompassing a variety of Sanskrit traditions, from court compositions to the great epics, and the Tamil traditions of south India. While most of these poems, north and south were composed at roughly the same time (during the early centuries of the Common Era), they show sharp differences in aesthetic, content and audience.

Court poetry: Sanskrit and Prakrit

Genre Classical Sanskrit poetry was dominated by kavya, a capacious category that is perhaps best understood as a meta-genre containing several sub-genres. Long poems, for example, were called maha ('great') kavya. Another prominent form of Sanskrit court poetry is the lyric verse devoted to love and longing and using a repertoire of 'adornments' (alankara), such as stock epithets, alliterations and metaphors. Kavya poets flourished during the Gupta Empire (3rd-5th c. CE).

Sattasai An early but little-known collection of classical Indian poetry is the Sattasai ('Seven Hundred') by Hala (c. 100 CE). These 700 single-verse, largely secular poems were composed in Prakrit (a regional variant of Sanskrit), probably in the Deccan. The poet Hala was a king of the Satavahana dynasty, though little is known of his life.

Buddhacarita The Buddhacarita ('Life of the Buddha') by Asvaghosa is often recognised as the earliest classical Sanskrit poem. Appearing in approximately 100 CE as a hagiography of the historical Buddha, it is composed in one of the simplest Sanskrit metres. Of its 28 chapters, or cantos, only the first 14 are found in extant Sanskrit versions, although complete versions do survive in Chinese and Tibetan.

Kalidasa The most influential classical Sanskrit poet was Kalidasa (5th c. CE), who was patronised by Gupta kings. Kalidasa was prolific. He wrote two long poems or mahakavyas (Kumarasambhava, 'Birth of the War God Kumara' and Raghuvamsa, 'Dynasty of Raghu'), plus a well-loved lyric poem (Megaduta, 'The Cloud Messenger') and a still-performed play (Shakuntala). He was also a famous playwright.

Bhartrhari Little is known about Bhartrhari, though most scholars believe he lived in the 5th century CE and wrote important Sanskrit texts, such as the Vākyapadīya (an original discourse on Sanskrit grammar and philosophy). He is best known, however, for the poems in the Śatakṛaya, a collection of short verses in which each group is dedicated to a different rasa (the distillation of an aesthetic mood in a reader/listener).

Court Poetry: Tamil

Cankam Classical Tamil poetry is known as cankam ('academy'), after the academy of poets who, by tradition, composed this corpus of nearly 2,400 poems probably between 100-300 CE. Most of the 473 named poets composed only a single poem, although a few (Kapilar 235 poems and Ammuvanar 127) were prolific. Avvaiyar, one of the few female poets, wrote 59. Unlike the Sanskrit poets of the Gupta court, these Tamil poets were patronised by the rulers of small kingdoms, and many were itinerant.

Genre Tamil poetry has two overarching genres: akam ('interior') and puram ('exterior'). This dichotomy, which refers to both the topographical and psychological dimensions of a poem, may be translated as 'love' and 'war' poems.

Love poems (akam) describe inner states of love, usually in or around the house. They are divided into five groups, each devoted to a specific type or condition of love. Each of these five states of love is also associated with a specific landscape, flower, time of the day, season of the year and bird. Convention requires that no names, only stock figures, appear in the love poems. Many are extremely short, not more than ten lines. By contrast, the war poems (puram) typically describe public events, especially war and the actions of kings, and they contain the names of kings, poets, battles and towns. They are filled with an ethos of fame and shame. A mother, for instance, does not want to see wounds on her son's back. And a king places his daughters in the care of a bard before he starves himself to death, rather than face defeat.

Epic poetry: Mahabharata

Composition The Sanskrit Mahabharata ('Great War') was composed over a number of centuries. When completed about 400 CE, it had amassed 100,000 couplets (more than 8 times the Iliad and Odyssey put together). The Sanskrit Mahabharata is only one of many, many variants of the story that is found in numerous accounts in every major Indian language. Like all early Indian texts, this sprawling epic was composed orally. Even its traditional author, the sage Vyasa, is said only to have composed and declaimed the verses, while the writing was done by Ganesa (the elephant-headed god) as a scribe. The orality of this great epic is further revealed by its frequent use of the story-within-a-story device.

Contents The core of the Mahabharata, interspersed with large chunks of didactic and mythological material, is the story of a dynastic struggle between two groups of cousins: the Pandavas and the Kauravas. This core story is told in the form of a conversation between a blind king (Dhritrashtra) and his charioteer, Krishna, who describes the details of the 18-day war between the king's nephews. That this great war did in fact occur at Hastinapur (not far from Delhi) is accepted by most historians, who place it sometime between 1200 and 800 BCE. Thus, not unlike the Iliad, this Indian epic reconstructs a battle several centuries after the historical event.

Themes While war is the centrepiece, the background is equally important to the dramatic tension. We watch as the cohesion among fraternal kin (a high priority in a patrilineal and patrilocal society like Hindu north India) slowly breaks down. Jealousy, poor judgement, childlessness, a curse, sexual humiliation of a wife and a disastrous game of dice breed animus and lead to the exile of one group by the other. Underneath themes of war, however, the Mahabharata is a discourse on the subtleties of dharma, or right conduct. It repeatedly comments on the code of conduct for a king, a warrior, a father and a son, and then pits one loyalty against another. The moral dilemmas are sometimes so complex that even a righteous character is 'trapped' and cannot avoid making a 'wrong' decision.

Bhagavad Gita These complexities of dharma are dramatised in the Bhagavad Gita, which is told in Book 6, again as a dialogue, this time between prince Arjuna and his charioteer Krishna. Arjuna faces his cousins across the battlefield and expresses his doubts about the morality of killing his kin. Krishna then launches into the famous discourse in which he tells the prince that, as a warrior, he must engage in battle. The renunciation of action, continues Krishna, is for others and is not proper conduct for a warrior-prince. A warrior must act, but he must act without attachment to the consequences ('fruits') of his action. Finally, Krishna explains that the prince can attain that detachment by surrendering himself and his actions to Krishna (an avatar of Visnu).

Epic poetry: Ramayana

Composition The Sanskrit Ramayana ('Way of Rama' or 'Story of Rama') was composed over several centuries (about 200 BCE to 300 CE), drawing on versions of the story circulating in oral tradition. It was thus composed by different poets, but its author is said by tradition to be the legendary sage Valmiki. However, we speak of the 'Valmiki Ramayana' because there are hundreds of other versions of the story, and more than 25 in Sanskrit alone. The multiple versions, simple metre and frame story all point to the origins of the Rama story in oral tradition.

Frame story Valmiki begins his story with a frame-tale, in which he watches a hunter kill one of a pair of love-birds and then curses the hunter. After a moment's reflection, the poet realises that his grief (soha) has been expressed in a particular type of verse (sloka) which he then uses to compose the Rama epic. This lends a self-conscious aesthetic tone to the composition but also introduces the theme of love and loss, which runs throughout the story.

Contents The core story is the life and adventures of Rama, avatar of Visnu and heir to his father's throne. Major episodes include his marriage to Sita, their exile in the forest and Sita's kidnapping by a demon king (Ravana) who takes her back to his palace in Lanka (Sri Lanka). Rama rescues her with the assistance of an army of monkeys, led by the resourceful Hanuman. Rama eventually kills the demon and the lovers are reunited.

A Theme As with the Mahabharata, the story illustrates the value of fraternal loyalty and dharma. Underlying this is the power of love, which motivates nearly every character, sometimes to act against his own best interest. Love can also be destructive, especially in the case of the demons. For example, the brooding love of Ravana for Sita pervades the entire epic and eventually drives him to destruction.

Epic Poetry: Cilappatikaram

The 'Lay of the Anklet' (Cilappatikaram) is an epic composed in Tamil about 500 CE, probably by a Jain monk. Consisting of more than 5,000 verses, it is a tragic story of jealousy, deception, undeserved death and the power of a woman's love. While it bears some similarity to contemporaneous Sanskrit court poetry, especially in its ornate descriptions of place and nature, its deeper message of loss and revenge sets it apart. The heroine, Kannaki, became a popular goddess in Tamil culture, reversing the usual sequence in which a deity becomes a literary figure.

Discussion/questions

1. Both the Ramayana and the Mahabharata turn on the loyalty and betrayal of brothers. The strength of fraternal bonds is not a unique theme in world literature, especially in epics. Compare the Indian articulation of this theme with two other examples from world literature.
2. The Tamil epic Cilappatikaram, on the other hand, focuses on the bond between husband and wife. The wife, Kannaki, is the emotional centre of the story and its heroine. Analyse the epic on three levels: as a south Indian/Tamil story, as an Indian story and as a universal story.
3. Study the character of Rama in the Ramayana. He is the hero who defeats the demon, rescues his wife and renounces the throne to uphold truth. In most versions he is the incarnation of god Visnu and of dharma (moral law/duty). However, he has many shortcomings, not least in his treatment of his wife. He also makes errors of judgement and is indirectly responsible for his father's death. Is he really a god, or simply a flawed human?
4. The Bhagavad Gita episode in the Mahabharata is the best-known part of this rambling, massive epic. Read it carefully and analyse the ethical debate it dramatises. Is it a dilemma that is peculiar to Indian/Hindu culture or does it have wider relevance?

1. From the Buddhacarita, trans. Charles Willemen

Birth, old age, illness, and death are suffering; separation from what one loves or meeting with enmity, not attaining something one wants, and so on are kinds of suffering.

If one renounces desire or does not yet renounce it, has a body or is without a body, if one is without any pure quality, one may briefly say that all this is painful.

When, for instance, a great fire is appeased, it does not give up its heat, even though it may have become smaller. Even in a self that is quiet and subtle by nature, great suffering still exists.

The afflictions of greed and the others, and all kinds of wrong actions—these are the causes of suffering. If one gives them up, suffering is extinguished.

When, for instance, seeds are without earth, water, and so forth, when all conditions are not combined, shoots and leaves do not grow.

Existences continue by nature, from heaven to the woeful destinations. The wheel keeps turning and does not stop. This is produced by desire. Demotion differs according to weak, intermediate, or strong, but all kinds of actions are the cause.

If one has extinguished greed and so forth, there is no continuation of existence. When all kinds of actions have ended, different kinds of suffering know long-lasting appeasement. If this exists, then that exists. If this is extinguished, then that is extinguished.

Absence of birth, old age, illness, and death; absence of earth, water, fire, and wind; and both absence of beginning, middle, and end and condemnation of a deceptive law—these mean tranquility without end, abodes of the noble.

2. From the Tamil Kuruntokai, trans. AK Ramanujan

What could my mother be to yours?
What kin is my father
to yours anyway?
And how did you and I ever meet?
But in love,
our hearts have mingled
As red earth and pouring rain.

3. From the Tamil Kuruntokai, trans. AK Ramanujan

Bigger than earth, certainly,
higher than the sky,
more unfathomable than the waters
is this love for this man of the mountain slopes
where bees make rich honey from the flowers of the kurinci that has such black stalks.

4. From the Tamil Purunanuru, trans. AK Ramanujan

This world lives
Because some men do not eat alone, not even when they get the sweet ambrosia of the gods;
they've no anger in them,
they fear evils other men fear

but never sleep over them;
give their lives for honor,
will not touch a gift of whole worlds
if tainted;
there's no faintness in their hearts and they do not strive for themselves.
because such men are,
This world is.

DRAMA

Overview

Although little is known of the beginnings of drama in India, the earliest surviving plays (from the 5th c. CE) contain some of the best-loved stories in Indian literature. Classical Indian drama is, at the same time, very different to modern Indian 'theatre.' Closer to folk and regional traditions, classical drama is a mixture of the three arts of music, dance and theatre. As with classical Indian poetry, drama flourished under the generous patronage of the Gupta kings of north India. While drama was certainly performed in classical south India, we have no surviving texts or other reliable evidence of such a tradition.

Terminology

Genre 'Theatre' in Sanskrit is known as natya, although this term also covers 'dance' for the simple reason that the two arts were combined in classical India. Another term, nataka (or natakam), refers to 'drama' that is based on epic themes, although now it is used widely in most Indian languages to mean 'theatre' in the western sense. Ancient Tamil literature refers to 'drama' using the Sanskrit term nataka, and several plays (or what appear to be plays) are mentioned in subsequent literature, though none survive. The Tamil term kuttu is used for more localised, regional theatre traditions.

Aesthetics Indian classical theatre, and all Sanskrit literature and many art forms, is guided by an aesthetic theory. The two key terms are bhava, the mood or emotion of the dancer, and rasa, the distillation of that mood that is evoked in a (discerning) audience. The eight different rasas (love, pity, anger, disgust, heroism, awe, terror and comedy) were also later used to describe music and poetry.

History

Early fragments of a drama by Asvaghosa date from the 1st century CE, although it seems likely that dramatic performance must have occurred earlier. Two early Sanskrit texts, the Mahabhasya ('Great Commentary [on grammar]') and the Nāṭyaśāstra ('Treatise on Theatre'), from about the same period, provide evidence of a developed drama form. The earliest extant complete plays are those by Bhasa, Kalidasa and Sudraka (all 5th c. CE). Some scholars have detected Greek influence in early Indian drama, arguing that plays enacted at the courts of Indo-Greek kings (c. 250 BCE-50 CE) inspired Indian poets to develop their own form. Indeed, the curtain that divided the stage is called yavanika (from the Sanskrit word for 'Greek'). The famous 'Clay Cart' (see below) also bears a superficial resemblance to the late Greek comedy of the school of Menander.

Transmission Manuscripts of plays by both Kalidasa and Sudraka have been copied and transmitted throughout Indian literary history, but Bhasa's 13 plays had been lost for centuries and were known only from their mention in other works. In 1912, however, palm-leaf manuscripts were found in an old Brahmin house in south India. None mentioned an author, but linguistic research eventually (after much debate) credited them to Bhasa.

Performance

Plays were performed by troupes of professionals, of both men and women, but amateur dramatics were not unknown (texts refer to performances at court by officials, kings and ladies of the harem). No physical theatre building survives, and it is assumed that plays were performed in palaces or in the homes of rich merchants. A curtain, through which actors emerged, divided the front from the back stage; no curtain divided the actors from the audience. Scenery was non-existent and props were few.

Conventional costumes were worn by stock figures, who also used the language of gesture to convey meaning. Plays began with an invocation to the gods, followed by a long prologue, in which the stage manager or chief actor often discussed with his wife or chief actress the occasion and nature of the event. Most of the play's dialogue was in prose, interspersed with verse, declaimed rather than sung.

Content

While classical Indian drama drew on mythic stories and characters in earlier Vedic literature, it also produced original stories and plot lines. In general, however, and like most of Indian literature, it did not hold with tragedy. Heroes and heroines might suffer defeat and loss, but a happy ending was not far away. There was, however, sufficient melodrama to satisfy the emotional needs of the audience. Innocent men are led toward execution, chaste wives are driven from their homes and children are separated from their loving parents.

Plays and playwrights

Bhāsa Very little is known about Bhasa, the earliest (and arguably the greatest) of the classical playwrights. He is dated between 200 BCE and 200 CE, and all that is certain is that he pre-dated Kalidasa and that 13 plays are attributed to him. Many of those plays retell episodes from the Ramayana and Mahabharata, and some are tragedies, which was unusual in classical Indian theatre. For example, the Pratima Natika tells the story of Kaikeyi from the Ramayana, usually considered the evil step-mother responsible for the sufferings of Rama and his father. Bhasa, however, shows how she herself suffered from her guilt.

Kalidasa The best-known playwright of the classical period is Kalidasa (5th c. CE), whose fame rests also on his poetry. Three of his plays have survived: Malavika and Agnimitra (a palace intrigue), Urvashi Won by Valor (the Vedic story of Urvashi) and The Recognition of Shakuntala. This last has always been considered his finest work and is still performed today, around the world.

Shakuntala Shakuntala is a love story, between a king and Shakuntala, the foster-daughter of a hermit. After their meeting and falling in love, much of the play describes their love-sickness, as they are unable to meet or marry. When they do meet again, the king gives her a ring to remember him by and to plight their troth. They marry but are cursed by an irascible Brahmin: Shakuntala will lose the ring, and the king will not remember her. In a tragic scene, Shakuntala, pregnant and veiled, is led before the king, who is unable to recall her. In folktale fashion, the lost ring is found by a fisherman inside a fish. The king recovers his memory and all ends happily.

Sudraka The only other surviving play of significance in this period is Mrcchakaṭika ('The Little Clay Cart') written by Sudraka, a contemporary of Kalidasa. This story is one of the most realistic and the plot one of the most complicated in the large corpus of classical Sanskrit literature. The central narrative concerns a love affair between a poor Brahmin (whose son can only have a little clay cart instead of grander toys) and a virtuous courtesan, but quickly moves into political intrigue, stolen jewels, a vivid court scene and the overthrow of a wicked king. With this moving story, 'The Little Clay Cart' is the most easily appreciated of classical dramas.

Discussion/questions

1. Drama was popular with court cultures in the classical period of Indian history, yet it has struggled since the medieval period to achieve a similar status. How does this history compare with the history of drama in other literatures, for example, Greek, Chinese, Russian or English?
2. The recognition theme in Shakuntala is widespread in world literature (cf. the ancient Egyptian text of Sinuhe, King Lear, Cinderella, Lord of the Rings). Consider how such topics as memory loss and recollection, identity and disguise, loyalty and betrayal, are expressed in different literary cultures.
3. A theory of classical Indian aesthetics was codified in the Natyasastra. The two key terms are the bhava ('mood,' 'emotion') of the artist (poet, dancer, actor) and the rasa ('taste,' 'sentiment') or the distillation of that mood that is evoked in a discerning audience. How does this aesthetic theory compare with another aesthetic, such as that in Greek theatre, Chinese opera or Shakespearean theatre?

Text

from 'The Little Clay Cart,' trans. Arthur Ryder

Maitreya [a friend]: Well, which would you rather, be dead or be poor?

Charudatta [Brahmin]: Ah, my friend,

Far better death than sorrows sure and slow;

Some passing suffering from death may flow,

But poverty brings never-ending woe.

Maitreya: My dear friend, be not thus cast down. Your wealth has been conveyed to them you love, and like the moon, after she has yielded her nectar to the gods, your waning fortunes win an added charm.

Charudatta: Comrade, I do not grieve for my ruined fortunes. But this is my sorrow. They whom I would greet as guests, now pass me by.

"This is a poor man's house," they cry.

As flitting bees, the season o'er,

Desert the elephant, whose store

Of ichor [blood of the gods] I spent, attracts no more.

Maitreya: Oh, confound the money! It is a trifle not worth thinking about. It is like a cattle-boy in the woods afraid of wasps; it doesn't stay anywhere where it is used for food.

During the mating season, a fragrant liquor exudes from the forehead of the elephant. Of this liquor bees are very fond.

Charud: Believe me, friend. My sorrow does not spring from simple loss of gold; For fortune is a fickle, changing thing, whose favors do not hold; but he whose sometime wealth has taken wing, finds bosom-friends grow cold.

Then too: A poor man is a man ashamed ; from shame

Springs want of dignity and worthy fame;

Such want gives rise to insults hard to bear;

Thence comes despondency; and thence, despair;

Despair breeds folly; death is folly's fruit

Ah! The lack of money is all evil's root!

Maitreya: But just remember what a trifle money is, after all, and be more cheerful.

Charudatta: My friend, the poverty of a man is to him a home of cares, a shame that haunts the mind,

Another form of warfare with mankind; the abhorrence of his friends, a source of hate

From strangers, and from each once-loving mate; but if his wife despise him, then't were meet in some lone wood to seek a safe retreat.

The flame of sorrow, torturing his soul, burns fiercely, yet contrives to leave him whole.

Comrade, I have made my offering to the divinities of the house. Do you too go and offer sacrifice to the Divine Mothers at a place where four roads meet.

Maitreya: No!

Charudatta: Why not?

Maitreya: Because the gods are not gracious to you even when thus honored. So what is the use of worshipping?

Charudatta: Not so, my friend, not so! This is the constant duty of a householder.

FICTION

Overview

Short didactic tales known as nithi katha ('moral story') are generally in prose, although sometimes the 'lesson' itself is in verse. Nearly all these numerous stories began as oral tales before being collected and written down in manuscripts by scribes and scholars. The collections often use what is called a 'frame-story' to give a narrative coherence to the otherwise disparate tales. These originally oral tales were collected and redacted in manuscript form sometime in the early centuries of the Common Era. Some were composed in Pali, but most were in Sanskrit, although all were eventually written down in every Indian language.

We cannot put a date on these classical collections of moral stories. We can only assume that they drew upon tales that, even by the time they were committed to writing in the 6th c. CE, were already hundreds of years old.

Pancatantra

History Although scholars suggest that the 'original' version of the Pancatantra was composed between about 200 BCE and 200 CE, the earliest manuscript (now lost) was a Pahlavi (Middle Persian) version written in 570 CE. The oldest surviving version of the Pancatantra in an Indian language is a Sanskrit text by a Jain monk, dated 1199 CE and found in Kashmir. This influential version is considered the first 'clean' copy since the Jain scholar apparently consulted all extant manuscripts before producing his master copy.

Contents The Pancatantra ('Five-Books') is a collection of nearly 100 animal fables. The frame-story is that a pundit instructs three ignorant princes in the art of statecraft, using these moral stories as lessons. The work is divided into five sections, each focusing on an aspect of statecraft, although each has more general significance. The five topics are: The Separation of Friends, The Gaining of Friends, War and Peace, Loss of Gains and Ill-Considered Action. Each of these sections is itself introduced by a frame-story, within which animals take turns telling a story.

Popularity The authority and popularity of the stories derives from the fact that they are believed to be the advice of a Brahmin, delivered in classical Sanskrit and addressing fundamental dilemmas of life. They function not only as admonitions on statecraft (like the 16th c. Italian text The Prince) and princely education, but also as entertaining tales about daily life.

The last topic (Ill-Considered Action) contains one of the most popular stories about a Brahmin's wife who rashly kills a mongoose, believing that it had threatened her child. Later, with the rational approach of her husband, she discovers that the mongoose had in fact protected her child from a snake.

Diffusion Stories in the Pancatantra diffused throughout India, where they are found in every one of its major languages, in oral and printed forms. Some tales have an international spread and have been recorded as far away as China and Wales. The chain of transmission began when the Sanskrit version was translated into Persian in the 6th century CE, followed by translations into Syriac, Arabic, Greek, Latin, Spanish and the major languages of Europe, where it was often called The Fables of Bidpai (or Pilpai). The first known English publication was the Morall Philosophie of Doni in 1570 CE.

Jataka

Lives of the Buddha The Jataka tales are similar to those in the Pancatantra (some tales are found in both collections) with the important difference that they were adapted to tell the story of the previous lives of the historical Buddha. In most variants of the text, each tale has a similar structure. First there is a folktale in prose, in which the Buddha-to-be appears as one of the characters, either human or animal. This is then followed by a brief commentary in verse that links the story to an aspect of the Buddha's teaching

Origins Linguistic analysis suggests that the composition of the Jataka tales in Pali (the language of early Buddhist scriptures) began in the 2nd or 3rd century BCE. Several recognisable tales are sculpted in stone on Buddhist monuments dating from that period. These stories are found scattered throughout the Buddhist Pali canon (the Tripitaka, or 'Three Baskets'), including 35 that were collected for religious instruction and form one section of that canon.

Diffusion The most influential redaction of the tales was compiled many centuries later, in the 5th century CE by Theravada Buddhists in Sri Lanka. This collection of about 550 tales, the Jataka Katha, is traditionally ascribed to a Sinhalese Buddhist monk named Buddhaghosa. Interestingly, the earliest surviving manuscript of that text is a Chinese translation, from Tibetan, also dated to the 5th century CE. While these Buddhist morality stories did not travel as widely as the more secular Pancatantra, several versions of the collection exist, for example, in Tibetan, Persian, Sinhalese, Thai and Burmese. A 9th-century CE stupa at Borobudur on Java has the 34 stories of the Jataka Mala carved in stone.

Jatakamala Among other influential texts is the Jatakamala (c. 400 CE) ascribed to Arya Sura. Several caves at Ellora, near Bombay and dated to about 700 CE, contain scenes of the Jataka tales and quotations from this particular text. This Sanskrit text contains 34 tales that illustrate the 'perfections' of the Buddha, a concept developed largely in Mahayana Buddhism. Even more significant, this later text does not include the crucial 'frame-story.'

Popular tale One of the most popular Jataka tales is called 'Prince Sattva.' In this story, the Bodhisattva ('Buddha-to-be') sees a starving tigress about to eat her own cubs. In desperation, the Bodhisattva kills himself, offering his flesh to the animal, so that she and her children might live. When the Bodhisattva's disciples see what has happened, they praise his generosity and lack of selfishness.

Discussion/questions

1. The trail of the Pancatantra leads from India to Europe, and some early Indian stories found their way into European oral tradition. Not many, however. How do stories cross linguistic and cultural borders? Does it really, as the cliché goes, take only one bilingual person? Why do some stories migrate and other not?
2. The Jataka tales were used to spread Buddhism, although monks also studied philosophical and theological texts (called sutras). Compare the tales with those other texts, especially the Four Noble Truths and the Eightfold Path. Choose one specific tale and analyse its language and message with the more official texts.
3. The frame-story is a common literary device that gives coherence to an otherwise disparate collection of tales. Compare the frame-stories of the Pancatantra and the Jataka with the frame-stories in other famous collections, such as the Arabian Nights, Canterbury Tales, Decameron.

Texts

1. The story of the loyal Mongoose, from the Pancatantra, trans. Ryder

There was once a Brahman named Godly in a certain town. His wife mothered a single son and a mongoose. And as she loved little ones, she cared for the mongoose also like a son, giving him milk from her breast, and salves, and baths, and so on. But she did not trust him, for she thought: 'A mongoose is a nasty kind of creature. He might hurt my boy.' Yes, there is sense in the proverb:

A son will ever bring delight,
Though bent on folly, passion, spite.
Though shabby, naughty, and a fright.

One day she tucked her son in bed, took a water-jar, and said to her husband: 'Now, Professor, I am going for water. You must protect the boy from the mongoose.' But when she was gone, the Brahman went off somewhere himself to beg food, leaving the house empty.

While he was gone, a black snake issued from his hole and, as fate would have it, crawled toward the baby's cradle. But the mongoose, feeling him to be a natural enemy, and fearing for the life of his baby brother, fell upon the vicious serpent halfway, joined battle with him, tore him to bits, and tossed the pieces far and wide. Then, delighted with his own heroism, he ran, blood trickling from his mouth, to meet the mother; for he wished to show what he had done.

But when the mother saw him coming, saw his bloody mouth and his excitement, she feared that the villain must have eaten her baby boy, and without thinking twice, she angrily dropped the water-jar upon him, which killed him the moment that it struck. There she left him without a second thought, and hurried home, where she found the baby safe and sound, and near the cradle a great black snake, torn to bits. Then, overwhelmed with sorrow because she had thoughtlessly killed her benefactor, her son, she beat her head and breast.

At this moment the Brahman came home with a dish of rice gruel which he had got from someone in his begging tour, and saw his wife bitterly lamenting her son, the mongoose. 'Greedy! Greedy!' she cried. 'Because you did not do as I told you, you must now taste the bitterness of a son's death, the fruit of the tree of your own wickedness. Yes, this is what happens to those blinded by greed. For the proverb says:

Indulge in no excessive greed
(A little helps in time of need) —
A greedy fellow in the world

Found on his head a wheel that whirled.'

2. From the Jataka Tales, trans. HT Francis and EJ Thomas

Once on a time at the foot of a certain mountain there were living together in one and the same cave two friends, a lion and a tiger. The Bodhisattva too was living at the foot of the same hill, as a hermit.

Now one day a dispute arose between the two friends about the cold. The tiger said it was cold in the dark half of the month, whilst the lion maintained that it was cold in the light half. As the two of them together could not settle the question, they put it to the Bodhisattva. He repeated this stanza:

In light or dark half, whensoever the wind
Doth blow, 'tis cold. For cold is caused by wind.
And, therefore, I decide you both are right.

Thus did the Bodhisatta make peace between those friends.

ESSAY

Overview

The thousand years of the classical period in India saw the proliferation of the essay in diverse forms. The primary forms are the sutra and the sastra, which are rules, laws or explanations of texts. Not all these forms, however, meet the criterion that the essay should present the author's own argument because so much of Indian literature is based on the authority of tradition rather than a named individual. Similarly, while most of the classical essay forms are written in prose, some do use verse or some combination of the two. However, the content of these essay forms, which range across law, political science, drama, grammar and aesthetics, and their intention, which is to instruct and inform, resemble the conventional essay.

Sutras

Hindu With the passage of centuries, the meaning of esoteric Vedic texts became obscure and a new type of prose text emerged to elucidate them. These were the sutras (lit. 'thread', cf. English 'suture'), or compilations of aphoristic expressions that functioned as manuals to explain the scriptures. Three major examples of these texts, all composed in the second half of the first millennium BCE, were the Srauta Sutras (a manual for Vedic rituals), the Grhya Sutras (a manual for domestic rituals) and the Dharma Sutras (a set of four manuals on Hindu law).

Buddhist The Mahayana Buddhist tradition of north India also produced remarkable religio-philosophical treatises called sutras. These texts explicated the esoteric doctrines of Mahayana 'perfectionism' and 'visualisation'. The most famous of these texts is the Vajracchedika or 'Diamond Sutra', so named because of the power of the diamond (a metaphor for insight) to cut through ignorance and reveal wisdom. The text was probably composed in the 4-5th century CE, though the earliest surviving text (a Chinese translation found by Auriel Stein in the Dunhuang caves) is dated 868 CE.

Dharma Sastras

Law texts In the early centuries of the Christian Era, the prose sutras were expanded, revised and collected in compilations known collectively as the Dharma Sastras ('Instructions on Dharma [Law]'). The number of these new, much longer, texts is unknown (many cited texts have not survived), but experts place the total at about 5,000. The Dharma Sastras are composed in a simple verse form (the sloka), but their content and intent are close to those of the academic essay.

Technique The technique of the Dharma Sastras is to quote from an old text, explicate it and then attempt to reconcile differing interpretations that have accrued over time. This approach means that the texts are veritable encyclopaedias of Hindu tradition, gathering verses, maxims, aphorisms and quotations from anywhere and everywhere. For example, the Manu Smṛti (see below) contains hundreds of verses found also in the Mahabharata, probably culled from a common source.

Key texts Four of these Dharma Sastra texts, which are commonly known as smṛti ('remembered' rather than 'heard' or śruti), are particularly influential in the development and practice of Hindu law. These four are: Manu Smṛti, Yajñavalkya Smṛti, Narada Smṛti and Viṣṇu Smṛti. The first two were composed in the period 200-500 CE, while the last appeared somewhat later.

Manu Smṛti Among this dense forest of Sanskrit law texts, the Manu Smṛti stands out as the most prominent in the development of the Hindu tradition. Even today, it is cited and studied by the general public, by law-makers and by public officials, especially in village councils known as the panchayat. The Manu Smṛti is primarily a discourse on the rights and obligations of individuals within society understood within a cosmological and teleological framework. This is evident from its four main divisions:

1. Creation of the world
2. Source of dharma [law]
3. The dharma of the four social classes
4. Law of karma, rebirth and final liberation

Theatre

Natya Sastra Another important yet very different sastra text is the Natya Sastra. Composed sometime in the early centuries of the Christian Era, and ascribed to the legendary Bharata, this Sanskrit work of approximately 6,000 verses is a manual on the theory and the performance of the theatrical arts: music, dance and drama. It describes the raga theory of Indian music, lists hundreds of gestures for dancers (including thirty-six for the eyes) and explains which pose is correct for which emotion. Even today, Indian dance-drama traditions, from classical to folk, continue to combine these three arts of sound, movement and story.

Aesthetics The Natya Sastra is most famous for its articulation of the classical Indian theory of aesthetics. The two key terms are bhava, the mood or emotion, and rasa, the distillation of that mood that is evoked in a (discerning) audience. Eight different rasas are recognised (love, pity, anger, disgust, heroism, awe, terror and comedy). The rasa theory guides not only theatre arts but also literary arts, especially poetry

Statecraft

Artha Sastra Another major essay text in this period is the Artha Sastra ('Manual on Material Gain'), which was composed over several centuries, probably taking final form about 300 CE. Attributed to Kautilya, a Brahmin advisor to the king Chandragupta (4th c. BCE), it contains sharp observations on, and reminiscences of, that earlier kingdom.

Material gain The Artha Sastra's discourse on polity elevates the science of 'acquiring and maintaining power' above the spiritual science of Vedic literature, and represents the gradual ascent of merchants and kings in Indian social history. Classical Hindu thought recognises four ends of man: dharma (social order), artha (material gain), kama (physical pleasure) and moksa ('spiritual release'). Proclaiming the prominence of artha, the text says: 'On material gain rests the realisation of social order and pleasure.'

Tirukkural The subjects of politics and material gain were also addressed in an influential Tamil text of this period, the Tirukkural (c. 400-500 CE). Attributed to Tiruvalluvar, who is said to have been an Untouchable/Dalit, this text contains 133 chapters, each with ten couplets (kural), offering advice on the ethics of everyday life. As such, it is much wider in scope than the Artha Sastra and speaks to concerns of the common man and woman. Even today, the memorable couplets, are quoted in daily conversations and in the media. A very popular couplet says: 'Everyone my kin, everywhere my home.' This is often quoted to counter the hierarchies of caste and status.

Grammar

Panini The Sanskrit grammar attributed to Panini (6th-5th c. BCE) is a masterful and precise work that, in effect, created the modern field of linguistics. It describes the language of the time and then proscribes rules for its use, using the aphoristic sutra form. Many linguists claim that this grammar has never been surpassed in descriptive accuracy of Sanskrit.

Tolkappiyam An equally famous Tamil grammar, ascribed to Agathiyar, is the Tolkappiyam. This Tamil text is dated variously, although a late date of about 400 CE seems reasonable inasmuch as its title ('On Ancient Literature') suggests it appeared sometime after the corpus of ancient Tamil poetry (c. 100-300 CE). It is divided into three sections: orthography and pronunciation; parts of speech and syntax; prosody and meaning. This work remains not only a major influence on the study of Tamil language but also a symbol of Dravidian cultural identity.

Discussion/questions

1. The rasa theory of classical Indian aesthetics rests on two key terms: bhava ('mood,' 'emotion') of the artist and rasa ('taste,' 'sentiment'), the distillation of that mood in a discerning audience. The eight rasas provided an emotional vocabulary for Indian poets, intellectuals and audiences to use when discussing culture. Compare this aesthetic theory with another theatrical aesthetic, such as Greek, Chinese or Shakespearean.
2. The Dharma Sastras, or Hindu law books, are large compilations of older texts and interpretations. Looking at the legal traditions in other parts of the world, do you think this 'encyclopaedic' approach is effective or cumbersome?
3. The ancient Indian grammar of Panini is considered one of the finest works ever produced in the field of linguistics. After reading the secondary literature on this topic, can you identify its major contributions to modern linguistics?

Texts

1. From the Artha Sastra 7.2 trans. Patrick Olivelle

When the degree of progress is the same in pursuing peace and waging war, peace is to be preferred. For, in war, there are disadvantages such as losses, expenses and absence from home.

2. From the Artha Sastra 2.1.3.6-2.1.39 trans. Patrick Olivelle

The king should grant exemption [from taxes] to a region devastated by an enemy king or tribe, to a region beleaguered by sickness or famine.

He should safeguard agriculture when it is stressed by the hardships of fines, forced labor, taxes, and animal herds when they are harassed by thieves, vicious animals, poison, crocodiles or sickness. He should keep trade routes [roads] clear when they are oppressed by anyone, including his officers, robbers or frontier commanders when they are worn out by farm animals. he king should protect produce, forests, elephants forests, reservoirs and mines established in the past and also set up new ones.

3. From the Tirukkural, trans. P.S. Sundaram

Make foes of bowmen if you must, never of penmen.

Great wealth, like a crowd at a concert, gathers and melts.

It is compassion, the most gracious of virtues, that moves the world.
